SUSTAINABILITY STATEMENT

Glant Textiles, based in the Pacific Northwest region of the United States with its natural splendor, has long drawn inspiration from nature and the natural world, and believes and is committed to preserving the environment to the best of our abilities. Glant is committed to producing minimal impact on the environment and to prioritizing this wherever possible.

To that end, Glant is committed to designing and manufacturing textiles that perform and are meant to last, so as to reduce material usage and waste. Additionally, wherever possible, Glant does not add chemicals for backing, finishing, or treatments. Glant endeavors to use as little chemistry as possible and to produce fabrics which are intended to last without additional performance enhancing finishes whenever possible.

Owning our own production in Northern Italy, allows us to monitor the production of the majority of our textiles, and prioritize minimal waste in materials. Yarns do not go unused and excess yarns are repurposed for research and development.

As a boutique company and textile house, when sourcing production outside of our own mill, we partner with bespoke suppliers, including textile mills, yarn spinners, and dyers, many of which are small, generations old operations and do not have the resources to conduct extensive analysis and testing necessary for product transparency documentation even when they are employing environmentally responsible practices.

We, at Glant, wholeheartedly believe in environmental responsibility, as we have since our inception in 1976.
